

Pickup Artist Fashion Pt. 1

I am NOT the most fashionable guy in the world.

Usually the one who pick out clothes for me is my girlfriend - not for MY benefits...

... but so that she doesn't feel embarrassed when we go out in public together!

If it were me to pick the clothes, I'd wear a sweats and T-shirt all day, together with an old worn sneakers. It means that I think a fashion as silly.

I can definitely appreciate the artistic aspect of fashion design and style. When you look at a really well dressed woman, her outfit is like a work of art, and I dig that.

I kinda lose respect when a guy is "too stylish."

Don't get it wrong, a guy should present himself like he means to be taken seriously. A good quality, nice and well-fitting clothes are a fundamental to masculine expression.

But some men take it too far.

Case in point, the obsession with "peacocking" in the pickup Community for the past several years.

Hearing that words makes me cringe.

YOU ARE NOT A PEACOCK.

If you don't know what "peacocking" is, let me explain it to you.

A while ago, there was an emergence of routine-based "game," relying heavily on superficial techniques, status games, and over-analysis of social interactions.

I didn't see the value of any of this, and have always gone in the opposite direction.

Reason for this is that I saw how pretending to be someone other than yourself, and saying jokes and routines that other guys came up with JUST FELT WRONG.

On top of that, the FIRST FOCUS of all that strategy and game-playing was to eventually get approval from women, while making them feel insecure so they'd think you were cooler than them.

Think about the layers in the dating approach. Not only are you faking your personality because you

- a) look for approval (as if girls were an authority on what makes man a man)
- b) keep the fact that you're seeking approval
- c) play games with women so that they feel insecure and try to seek your approval

YUCK

One of the main techniques of this approach was to "peacock," to dress up in a really loud, ostentatious way so that women would "notice" you and want to talk to you.

Now there's nothing wrong with wearing a nice watch, or a necklace that has some personal meaning.

But don't do it to make women like you.

I'm pretty sure a lot of men has seen this approach on TV shows, straining to make sense out of this hare-brained "technique."

It's sad to say that some students of other pickup schools that I've encountered, were not only nervous, misdirected, clumsy, they looked RETARDED.

So I want to make a direct proof when it comes to fashion and approaching women.

There are few pieces of things you need to pay attention to when it comes to your physical looks.

After you get this stuff handled, you should put it out of your mind, and not wait for women to notice you before you TAKE ACTION.

Before moving on, I have something to expose.
